														span. The main beam for the house ends at the middle of the garage beam and they share the same lally column. My plan is to first build a temporary 2x4 wall to hold to support the floor joists and then remove the current double 3x12 beams and replace with two ply's of 1 3/4" x 11 7/8" LVL beams, and install a new lally column solely for the garage beam. The LVL beams will sit on a piece of pressure treated lumber at each end and will also be wrapped in flashing tape to prevent any wicking from the masonry and then will have mortar bed of type S to secure the beam to the block foundation.
